

Since children learn from the things they see, it should be easy to conclude that the violence on TV will encourage those who watch to immitate those violent actions. More mature viewers know that they must exercise self-control. Young children have not yet learned how to do that in many cases. They also do not see the finality of death in a TV arena and have no concept of what that means.